

If there's a Quebec City trip in the cards for this fall and/or winter, you might want to consider booking a few nights at the best hotel in the country.

At least that is according to Condé Nast Traveller – a UK-based luxury traveller magazine – and their reader's poll.

“Despite the setbacks and the delays and just a little bit of trepidation, 2022 was the year we really embraced travel again after pretty much two years of enforced abstinence,” says the publication.

And from the responses to the questionnaire that accompanied CN Traveller's 25th “Reader's Choice Awards,” Auberge Saint-Antoine in Quebec City ranked as the best hotel in all of Canada.

The publication says selections were ranked based on accessibility, remote-working potential, and how “community-minded they are” – with the boutique hotel in Quebec City taking home the top spot, nationwide.

Condé Nast Traveller says the number one places, hotels, airports, cruise lines, and travel fixers from around the world were part of its ranking.
